

*“Why are they so mean?
I don’t want to go to school anymore, I don’t want to play sports. I just want to do nothing.”*

Depression is an illness that affects six million people nationwide. This can be brought on by a spontaneous physical or chemical change in the brain or external influences such as a significant loss by death, separation, divorce, moving from one’s home or illness. The fact remains that depression IS NOT a normal part of life. Please see the reverse side for a list of questions that can help you identify if someone you love is contemplating suicide.

I'm concerned about you:

- Do you feel like nobody cares?
- Do you feel worthless?
- Are you thinking of killing yourself?

Please remember, you cannot make someone suicidal by talking about it. If you get a "yes" answer, don't panic.

It's time to ask for help – call now!
